Description

This finely crafted piece dazzles with its intricate diamond cutting and alternating horizontal bands of mitre cutting. The lid is crowned with a faceted knop finial, while both the dish and base are encircled by a crown-like border of van-dyke rims, lending a regal air to its form.

The brilliance and precision of the cutting exemplify the technical mastery and elegance of early 19th-century English glassmaking. Likely intended for serving butter, this piece would have been a centrepiece of the refined Regency table, both functional and ornamental.
